The hypothesis on the time course of the effects of cocaine on VTA and SNr neurons was tested by examining the time course of the recovery of GABA(A) and GABA(B) receptor mediated responses. The amplitude and reversal potential of inhibitory currents was measured during and after a train of microiontophoretic applications of GABA to intact, brain slice preparations. Neurons were classified as being tonically active or passive when tonic discharge was higher or lower than the discharge during the test period. In the VTA, none of the recordings revealed a steady-state inhibitory current, regardless of the level of activity of the recorded cells. In the SNr, all tonically passive cells responded with a long-lasting, phasic inhibitory current while in tonically active cells only a short lasting current could be evoked. The response of tonically active cells decreased in amplitude, but the response of tonically passive cells was accelerated after the injection of cocaine. The effects in the SNr were observed with a time constant of recovery of approximately 3 min. The results of this study are discussed in relation to other findings.A Proteomic Study on DNA-Binding Proteins in Whey Protein Isolate-Enriched Diet-Induced Rat Adipose Tissue. WPI is a nutritious protein rich in amino acids and other nutritional substances. However, WPI has detrimental effects on adipose tissue. In the present study, we aimed to investigate the effects of a whey protein isolate-enriched diet on DNA-binding proteins (DBP) in rat epididymal adipose tissue. We found that the number of DBP significantly increased in the WPI-fed rats, whereas it was
