The "Customer Lifetime Value" is calculated with the following formula So if you provide them a download after a customer has become a paying customer for 5 years, it gets included in the above table. If you suspect that there is a significant amount of free users, you can use multiple methods for deducing the number of free users. The most straight forward approach is to take the number of active users from a month ago and multiply that by the conversion rate for non free users (5-10%). This leads to an estimate for the number of free users (using the conversion rate of free users for all of the following calculations). You can then run the number of users who became free in that month into the conversion rate for non free users to get an estimate of the number of paid users that month. It is likely that this number will be significantly lower than the total number of free users in the first place. For example, if there are 1.3 million users who have paid, and 1.0 million free, then if you allow a conversion rate of ~10% (the average of 5-10%) then you are still looking at around 850,000 paid at the end of the month. If you don't get a significant number of new paid users in that month (based on the table above), then you probably don't need to worry about it, and the number of paid users is likely to have been a temporary fluctuation around the level of free users. About This ContentNew car pack (Japanese exclusive)The original game with cars, a city, new events, speedometer and more.Riding games are some of my favorite games and I've always wanted to have riding games in RiMS. Unfortunately this is the first time that a game actually worked for me.In RiMS Racing you play as a driver in a race, like Mario Kart, or drive a car through a city like Need for Speed, but you also have the chance to pick up your bike and start a trail ride.The game was composed with a special version of RiMS without the GUI (user interface), also the game wasn't intended to be a great game, so it only has 7 cars, but they're all good and you get a city with buildings, different road styles and surface, speedometer, junkyard, etc. Riding game by developer of DaCostaGames, the best Riding Games in all of RiMS.ReviewsFun game. Doesn't offer anything new, but it's just a fun little game with a nice surprise at the end of the game-- Steam reviewerHow to play: The driver must run through a city and avoid pedestrians, buildings, animals, cars, trucks, buses, other vehicles, etc. I liked it because the game is fast and easy to get the hang of. A simple but entertaining game! Enjoy it! Reviews Classic-style racing gameplay for PS1™, Nintendo 64® and PS2™ gamers with gorgeous images and an excellent soundtrack. All the tracks are based on real-world courses, like that of the Isle of Man TT racing series, that will test your driving skills. Traffic simulators seem boring to many, but when you look at the support they get and the addictive qualities they provide, they become the best. Join the crowd and try Traffic. Enjoy it. Review Racing Simulation: Toronto 1000, 16 Reviews Fun and highly entertaining game. I am not normally a fan of games with an external cursor, but this one manages to combine that and a pseudo physics engine to make it feel natural, much more so than the Quake series. Plus, it features a lot of vehicles, racing types, and different tracks. So if you like racing games, you will probably love this one. Racing games are my favorite. After testing this game for a few days, it's gotten to a point where you know exactly what to do before you hit the gas and what to do once you're under control of

Series for 2018 Speak to any of the leading Japanese brands, and they will tell you the next generation of LMP1 cars is about to explode. After being unable to seriously challenge the two prototypes and one hybrid from their very first Le Mans with three drivers competing in Peugeot, Toyota and Honda have now put their foot on the accelerator and they're not putting it down. Some of the products are internal development but it's anticipated now that the entire package will be revealed next year, culminating in prototype efforts by six brands. Tomorrow's car is being developed and engineered in Europe and Asia as the current model of running American and Asian privateer teams, then fulfilling contracts to finish the season, fail to fulfil their commitments. Toyota, now just months into a comprehensive winter restructuring, is being assisted by the impressive Roni Motorsport squad as the Japanese marque seeks to help turn Le Mans into a marquee week for Toyota's in-house teams. The 2018 version of the RS-Es will be let loose in June, with Peugeot the first of the Japanese manufacturers to start testing their 2018 contender in the middle of last year. Honda's return to prototype racing with the RCF is a contender for the first Automobile Club de l'Ouest (ACO) World Sportscar Championship (WSC) manufacturers' title. For the first time since 2009, Dallara and Multimatic won't produce a single LMP2 race car in the WEC, in-line with the new rules for 2017. The WEC's new regulations and the new company that will oversee the WEC's production activity will deliver a first generation prototype that perhaps hints at what is to come. It's fair to assume that even though Porsche and Audi won't be on the grid in LMP1 in 2018 they will remain a presence. The WEC changes mean that on the basis of a five race season there will be up to two manufacturers, the HPD ARX-05's and the new Toyota's go head-to-head. Yet the biggest challenge the Japanese brands face is the uncertainty of stability. Many of the cars that will be racing in 2018 are in their third or fourth season in production. A new car can be the starting point for a very good season but can also be fraught with teething problems. Manufacturers are
