In fact, you may find it easier to keep all of your fonts in one place rather than on your computer itself. Having a folder that you keep all your fonts in will allow you to easily find any particular font in a hurry (as in, the next time you need it). Follow these steps to create a text file that contains all your current text files: 1. **Create a new folder on your computer.** A new folder is the best place for all your fonts to reside. You can create the folder by right-clicking the desktop (in Windows) or by dragging and dropping a folder into the "My Docs" folder on a Mac. 2. **Right-click or click on a blank space on the desktop and choose New → Text Document.** The Text Document window appears. 3. **Enter the name of your text file when prompted (**_ _**For example, Fonts.txt**_ _**), and then click the Save button.** The text file now has the name Fonts.txt in the folder you created. 4. **Open the new text file that you created.** The file should have the same name ( _Fonts.txt_ ) and the same font-related information (Example A) in the list of Fonts (See Figure 14-1). The list of Fonts is similar to the Font dialog box found in Publisher, and includes the style of font and the font size. Figure 14-1: Click on the New Text Document button to open this file. Now that you have all your fonts listed, go back to your main working folder where you have your original file with the other fonts and an image. Using the file-related information in the list of Fonts (see Figure 14-1), find the folder or file with the original font and open it. 5. **To swap fonts, double-click a font on the list and a dialog box opens (see Figure

Q: Can we please get back to titles which have some useful information in them? This meta question has been bumped up to the homepage for the moment to help deal with some of the spam. Since the time of the following screenshot, the question title has been edited to something like this: Now, for the record, I do not in any way condone either of the answers given, but is there any value in having a question title that doesn't simply recap what the title of the post is? The point of having a question title that gives some information is to: Present information about the title. Make it easier to find it, in search engines for instance. Make it easier to comprehend the general gist of the question. In this particular instance, there is no info in the question title at all. It could be considered to be either of the two answers, but maybe the edit was simply a case of somebody scaring away the spambot, and a poor time was had by all. A: I've just noticed this in the review list: Review Summary This question needs more attention. It's ready to be closed (currently 3 answers, 1 flagged). Vote to close if no edits/improvements are left. When I voted to close the question, the current title was: This looks like Unix code, but its dependency information is not included This title explains to anyone looking at the question why it needs closing, but does not actually include any information that any other individual might find useful. If a question title only gives code, then how does the OP know what version of code it is? That's why we edit the title and try to include version and dependency information. It's also why I vote to close questions that ask code questions, even if they have a good answer. The title that is currently on the post, or that I'm proposing adding to the post, would be: This looks like Unix code, but its version and dependency information is not included I think it's more useful because it allows someone to figure out if they need to investigate an older version of code, that they're not able to upgrade to yet, or if they simply need to update the version of code they have in their environment to get the job done. Q: How to add data / dynamic values to an array?
