Q: How to make a function that produces the same array, in JS? I would like to create a function, that, given an array, returns a new array that is the same as the initial one, except for the length of its elements. I found the function called Array.reduce() that can do the work, but I'm not completely sure about the logic. How can I get rid of the elements that are not in the initial array? And can this be modified so that it returns a new array, even if it doesn't have any elements? So let's say I have a simple array: const initialArray = [1, 2, 3, 4]; And I want to produce a new array, that has the same values, except its length is 2, so the result should be: [2, 2, 3, 4] I tried this way: const initialArray = [1, 2, 3, 4]; const getArray = (initialArray, reduce) => { const resultArray = reduce(initialArray); return resultArray.reduce((accumulator, currentValue) => { if (accumulator.length === resultArray.length) { for (let i = 0; i <-1) { accumulator.push(currentValue); } else { accumulator.splice(accumulator.indexOf(currentValue), 1); } } } } } e79caf774b
