A scoreboard is a tool that allows users to quickly and easily check on the current population of a species, whether species are present in a particular area, and a number of other environmental attributes. A representative of the United States National Park Service makes a cut on some of the red maple trees at Spring Lake in Acadia National Park, Maine, USA. The USA National Park Service manages nearly 400 parks and sites in the US. It also manages national and state parks along with other sites that include natural areas and historic sites. The National Park Service has more than 400,000 acres of land — making it the largest park service in the world. The goal of the National Park Service is to conserve the special places in the United States and to help people learn about them. There are nearly 400 parks in the US, and you'll find them in all 50 states and in many other countries around the world. For more information about the park service, visit: behavior of osmium redox states in DNA-containing electrodes modified with different polypyrrole modifications. We investigate the effects of different polypyrrole (PPy) modifications on osmium (Os) redox behavior in the presence of DNA with the intention to develop a label-free electrochemical biosensor for DNA detection. PPy-NH₂, PPy-NHS, PPy-NHA, and PPy-DHA are synthesized by free radical polymerization and characterized by high-resolution transmission electron microscopy, atomic force microscopy, and Fourier transform infrared spectroscopy. The electrochemical properties of PPy-NH₂, PPy-NHS, PPy-NHA, and PPy-DHA modified glassy carbon electrode (GP/PPy-NH₂, GP/PPy-NHS, GP/PPy-NHA, GP/PPy-DHA) is studied by cyclic voltammetry and electrochemical impedance spectroscopy. The results are analyzed in terms of the osmium redox state of the polymer and a complementary DNA strand. This work provides information on the electrochemical behavior of different osmium species adsorbed on a polypyrrole modified electrode. We find that

In order to study the metabolic effects of the adrenalectomy (ADX) in an animal model for humans, we fasted rhesus monkeys (Macaca mulatta) for 24 h (controls, n = 7) or 24 h plus either supplementary protein (10 g/day) or carbohydrate (15 g/day) diets (experimental groups, n = 4). Respiratory quotient (RQ) fell below 0.85 (indicative of carbohydrate oxidation) in all animals from the third day of fasting and remained at these low values for all four experimental groups for the next 4 days. Plasma glucose concentrations fell below 3 mmol/L at about 20 h of fasting, and stayed there for the entire 24-h period. When glucose was supplemented, plasma glucose rose to a steady value between 4.0 and 5.1 mmol/L during the last 12 h of the study. Plasma lactate rose only to a steady value between 1.5 and 2.2 mmol/L, indicating a slow utilization of endogenous glucose, the plasma triglyceride and free fatty acid concentrations rose to steady values between 1.5 and 6.5 mmol/L and 9.8 and 9.9 $\mu\text{mol/L}$, respectively. Urine nitrogen excretion rose from a low value of 0.4 mmol/h (control group) during the last few hours of the 3rd day of fasting to a steady value of 3.0 mmol/h (24 h) in both control and experimental animals. Plasma nonesterified fatty acids and urea nitrogen concentrations declined during 24 h fasting, while plasma potassium increased. We conclude that short-term adrenalectomy reduces
