DexposE2 is a new and simple task switcher for Windows which brings the application switcher from Mac OS X to the users of this operating system. What DexposE2 does is to show the window thumbnails in the bottom right corner of the screen and, by moving the mouse cursor over them, the user can instantly access the corresponding app. By default, DexposE2 shows the task switcher at the bottom of the screen, but you can configure the placement of the app switcher by simply dragging it on the screen. DexposE2 provides a second app switcher mode that hides the task switcher and uses the hotkeys to show the thumbnail of the current active window, a great feature for those users who don't need to quickly switch from one task to another. Of course, you can configure hotkeys to activate the hidden second app switcher mode by moving the mouse cursor on the corners of the screen. DexposE2 is completely customizable by means of the configuration window which features a lot of options. As expected, DexposE2 comes with a help manual, but it would be nice to see a tutorial video showing how to configure it. All in all, DexposE2 is a great app switcher alternative and it would be a great addition to the already existing task switching utilities for Windows, such as Alt + Tab. -- If you have some feedback about this review or you just want to tell me something, you can send me an email at: mattweir@computerworld.com. What's New in the?

You can configure hotkeys and set them as default shortcuts to turn DexposE2 on and off, open or minimize the window and show thumbnails of the windows that are running. You can also define a specific number of apps to be excluded from thumbnails and hotkeys. To know which apps are included or excluded you need to look into the options, but the basic idea is that you can choose to have a single app or any number of apps to be shown as thumbnails. Moving the mouse cursor in a corner of the screen opens the window of the currently selected application. There's also an option to show thumbnails of all open windows by moving the mouse cursor on the bottom left corner of the screen. DexposE2 comes with lots of settings, but you'll have to look into them to change the amount of thumbnails and the method of opening a window. There are also options to disable hotkeys and set a specific corner as a hotkey to open and close the window. DexposE2 is an interesting way to bring the eye-candy Mac OS X Expose tool on Windows. Unfortunately, it doesn't work so well on Windows 7 and you don't get a manual, so you can't learn what you can do and how you can configure the program. Version History: 1.0 Released. Introduction The HotKeys 1.0 program allows you to create hotkeys that can activate any program you want. You can even use one hotkey to activate the program and another one to close the program. There are many advanced features of this program, such as the possibility to have one hotkey to open and another one to close a program. There are also many features to control the process of creating hotkeys. For example, you can drag the hotkey you wish to activate to a specific program. You can also add a hotkey to the system tray, a hotkey that will minimize the window of a program and another hotkey that will open the window of a program. HotKeys is an easy-to-use program that allows you to create and manage hotkeys. This program will only work with Windows 2000, XP, Vista and Windows 7. HotKeys comes with a wizard interface, which guides you in a few simple steps to set up the program. Once you've finished setting up the program, you need to start playing with all its features, so we recommend you to read the features and options list. There's a number of options to configure, such as the color of the background, the space you need for each hotkey, the delay time between every hotkey, and so on. HotKeys also comes with a configuration wizard to manage all its
