Supermarket giant Lidl is launching a trial of its own in-store "climate change neutral" electricity plan in a bid to tempt back environmentally conscious consumers. The German company, which owns the Aldi supermarkets brand and other retail businesses, will launch the plan at its 225 stores in the UK in an effort to cater to consumers for whom making electricity choices has become a more serious consideration. But the plan could prove to be a tough sell for Lidl as it attempts to compete against the likes of Amazon and Tesco, which already offer "climate positive" versions of their own plans. Read more: Online shopping makes little difference to retail greenhouse gas emissions, study finds The change in Lidl's own shop ethos could be due to the company's increasing focus on its logistics and

Douglas, Lady Douglas Anne Douglas [Prowse], Lady Douglas, March 2, 1887 - October 26, 1945, was a politician in Quebec, Canada. She was a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Quebec for the district of Granby from 1921 to 1926. The daughter of George Prowse and Charlotte Jane (née Eadie), she was born in Cataract. She was educated at a convent school in Sussex and also received lessons at the Catholic College of Montreal. In 1911, she married Andrew Stuart Douglas, son of Robert Douglas and Anna (née Weldy), who was, at that time, principal of the Catholic College. Stuart Douglas was later a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Quebec for Aroostook and Gaspé. The couple later had two sons and a daughter. Lady Douglas was first elected to the Legislative Assembly of Quebec for Granby in a 1921 by-election, defeating the Liberal incumbent, William Fox. She was defeated in the same riding in the 1926 general election. In 1929, she was named to the Quebec Executive Council as Minister of Public Works. In 1933, Lady Douglas was the unsuccessful candidate for the Legislative Assembly of Quebec for a riding in Westmount in the 1933 general election. She died in Paris, France in 1945.
