Adobe used to have the biggest conference of the year at the Canons' yearly event, PhotoPlus. It was a pretty much the equivalent of the Apple event. They now take part only in the online event at Photopaid (but alas, are not mentioned here by Lightroom). The new event is entitled The Birth of Lightroom CC, and it will take place on October 1 in Lausanne, Switzerland. Photoshop is already one of the best photo editing tools on the market and, thanks to the programming wizards at Photoshop, it is only getting more powerful. Today's big news for the venerable Photoshop program is Real-Time Shadow and Bevel, both of which offer a number of creative and convenient shadow options. The latter first appeared in Photoshop 2019 and makes it easier to draw fine, natural-looking lines to frame content in your images. In this release, Adobe has added multitasking support, allowing you to view multiple photographs or layers at the same time inside the app when you're working in 2-D mode. That means that you can have two or more sets of image layers open at the same time, such as representing several images alongside the sketch of a new web logo. I have to admit that I like Android's inclusion of basic image editing tools. I just don't need to use them all that often and I am not sure why Adobe would want to force an all-iphone-native brand of photo editing at me. But fear not, they included a basic image editing capability in the iPad version too. The preview window automatically shows the current folder where the image originally is located. Whether in Photoshop or another Photoshop application, the result should be the same —

- Use the right-click menu to expand the folder to see location and original image location
- Right click again to take control of the image. Layers and Navigator frames can be used to move and adjust the image within the preview to the exact location in Photoshop.

“Photoshop is that product that every professional designer either loves or hates. Part time, part time, it’s in,” said Knoll. “We understand that this is the most important decade in the company’s history. I felt like Photoshop is at a watershed moment and things are going to change on the planet, whether we like it or not. There will be changes and as Photoshop has been for over 20 years, we’re just telling people: come to Adobe, we’re going to be surviving 100 years from now.” “At the end of the day, you either love it or hate it,” Knoll continued. “And we saw that we had all of these customers that were naysayers, who didn’t use it. So, I’ve been in Photoshop 25 years and I’ve never asked anyone to buy a product twice or use a product every day, and that says something about the product. So, you guys in the audience, I don’t hate that this is the most important decade in the company’s history.” At Adobe MAX, users will be able to experience the beta for Share for Review, an innovative new user experience for collaboratively editing Photoshop files. With Share for Review, the software now enables people to use the collaborative editing capabilities of Photoshop on any connected device. From as far as mobile, Share for Review enables users to edit on their phone, tablet or laptop and use Photoshop on any surface, whether they’re on the road or back at the office. The new “Edit in Place” experience enables users to work comfortably on their desktop, use in-app tools to correct mistakes and share updates, and switch between a Desktop canvas and a connected Surface. Photoshop users can easily view and select the surface that they want to work on simply by highlighting one or more of the connected surfaces with a tap and pull down tool.
